Australian Vanadium has appointed former Atlantic chief executive Daniel Harris to its board as a non-executive director.

Mr Harris is more recently known for his role as interim managing director at Atlas Iron between the departure of David Flanagan in August last year and the arrival of Cliff Lawrenson earlier this month. He is still a non-executive director of that company.

He is also a former vice president and head of vanadium assets at London-based, Russia-focused mining and steelmaking giant Evraz.

Australian Vanadium said Mr Harris brought a vast amount of experience in the vanadium industry and an understanding of the resource sector from both a technical and financial perspective.

AVL's managing director Vincent Algar said Mr Harris' expertise had already been and would continue to be of great value to the company.

Mr Harris said he had known Mr Algar for some time and had confidence in AVL's strategy and the team.

Australian Vanadium is focused on the development of its Gabanintha vanadium project near Meekatharra.

The company is also exploring opportunities in the emerging battery storage market.

Shares in the company were up 0.2 cents, or 11.77 per cent, to 1.9 cents at the close.
